Using electrical readings from the muscle that moves the jaw, practitioners can train a patient to control the tension in the overall area.